Once along the learning curve, with a better idea of your design, it's time to attend a class. They are concentrated, 3-day weekend affairs, where you work with the materials and check your intentions with the pros. Southwest Solaradobe School has been doing the classes since 1978. They're geared to the owner-builder and the trades person.

There's a huge amount of info across the net, in many languages. Rather than trying to assimilate all of the material (it's an information glut out there), we suggest that you leapfrog to what the real adobe builders are doing now. Let a book-pac of ADOBE BUILDER acquaint you with what's current. You'll find plenty of access to professional builders and suppliers therein, web and e-mail addresses, but best of all, photos, drawings and articles that you can use right away or pass on to friends or family...
